Synopsis:

The main actions happen after the mysterious disappearance of Joaquin, a lonely and reserved man, somewhat paranoid and obsessed with the idea of time travel. Trying to prove this theory through his own death under the idea that once dead he can cross from one time to another. From there, Joaquin seeks to find the logic to this hypothesis, until the situation becomes more and more a supernatural experience. It seems that everything is related to the inexplicable event of his disappearance. In turn, this condition suggests keeping him trapped in a kind of universe parallel to reality; an eternal return to the place where he supposedly disappeared. This is how Joaquín sees himself traveling again and again within all possible scenarios without finding a way out or explanations, nor the solution to what motivated him to start this strange and unpredictable journey; without a way out to help explain if it is possible to change the course of events or everything moves towards an invariable destination.
